The rule, in plain English

Rhode Island: submit a notice of intent to your local school committee for approval. You must teach the same number of days as public school (180 days), cover the required subjects, and keep an attendance register. Some districts add local requirements.

Your records checklist

- ❑ File your state's required notice, affidavit, or registration — before the deadline.
- ❑ Keep a daily log of instruction by subject for each child.
- ❑ Track days of instruction toward 180/year and keep an attendance register.
- ❑ Save work samples / a portfolio for each child (a few per subject, per term).
- ❑ Keep a curriculum & reading list of what you taught.
- ❑ Keep any evaluations or progress notes you choose to do.
- ❑ Build a high-school transcript as you go (grades 9–12) so credits aren't reconstructed later.
- ❑ Store immunization or exemption records if your state requires them.
- ❑ Keep everything in one place, backed up — so a records request is a non-event.

Tired of tracking all this on paper?

Cultivate logs your hours, subjects, attendance and work samples automatically — then generates print-ready compliance reports and transcripts for your state. One app for homeschool and home life.

This is a plain-English summary for your convenience (verified June 2026), not legal advice. Cultivate helps you store, organize, and produce your homeschool records — it isn't the authority on what your state requires. Homeschool laws change; always confirm current rules with your state or a homeschool legal resource (e.g., HSLDA) before relying on them. Source citation shown above.
