Virginia Homeschool Compliance Checklist

What to track to stay compliant · for your records · verified June 2026

Your requirements at a glance

Instruction required	No state-set minimum hours or days
Standardized testing	Yes — standardized testing/assessment required
Legal citation	Va. Code 22.1-254.1

The rule, in plain English

Virginia: file a Notice of Intent by Aug 15 (no superintendent approval needed). There is no minimum number of instructional days or hours. The parent must meet one of four qualification options (e.g., a high-school diploma). By Aug 1 each year you must provide evidence of academic progress — a standardized test at or above the 4th stanine (about the 23rd percentile), an evaluation letter from a licensed teacher or master's-degree holder, a school transcript, or another superintendent-approved assessment.

Your records checklist

- ❑ File your state's required notice, affidavit, or registration — before the deadline.
- ❑ Keep a daily log of instruction by subject for each child.
- ❑ Track instructional time and keep an attendance/days record.
- ❑ Save work samples / a portfolio for each child (a few per subject, per term).
- ❑ Keep a curriculum & reading list of what you taught.
- ❑ Record standardized test results if your state requires them.
- ❑ Build a high-school transcript as you go (grades 9–12) so credits aren't reconstructed later.
- ❑ Store immunization or exemption records if your state requires them.
- ❑ Keep everything in one place, backed up — so a records request is a non-event.

Tired of tracking all this on paper?

Cultivate logs your hours, subjects, attendance and work samples automatically — then generates print-ready compliance reports and transcripts for your state. One app for homeschool and home life.

This is a plain-English summary for your convenience (verified June 2026), not legal advice. Cultivate helps you store, organize, and produce your homeschool records — it isn't the authority on what your state requires. Homeschool laws change; always confirm current rules with your state or a homeschool legal resource (e.g., HSLDA) before relying on them. Source citation shown above.
